Ray County Landowner Expected to Head CIA

Fowler Hamilton, a New York attorney who owns Ray County farmland in the Henrietta area, apparently will be the new director of the Central Intelligence Agency, the U. S. espionage agency.

Press reports from Washington say that Hamilton has been chosen to succeed Allen W. Dulles as director of the CIA. The New York Herald Tribune said yesterday that Hamilton is expected to move into a CIA office soon and work with Dulles the rest of the summer.

Hamilton is associated with his brother, Simpson Hamilton, in ownership and operation of the Green

Top Farms around Henrietta. He is expected to make a trip here later this week, Simpson Hamilton said yesterday.

Fowler Hamilton, 50, is the son of the late Dr. Eugene P. Hamilton, Kansas City surgeon who built the Hamilton home on the east side of Highway 10 just north of Henrietta.

Hamilton has a long record of government service, including duty in the Far East and Great Britain and is a former Rhodes scholar. A Democrat, he has been an adviser to Missouri Sen. Stuart Symington.
